

In Our Community

by Nancy Stewart Copyright 2020

As I was writing songs for my summer reading concert for 2019 (Up, Up, and Away), there was a major news announcement from NASA. Scientists had captured the first ever photo of a black hole! This was HUGE! NASA was so excited they offered a free download of the photo. And of course, I had to write and perform a song about it. I've linked some great articles on my website at www.nancymusic.com/som/2020/black-hole.htm - photos included, of course- for you to share with children. Take a few minutes and check them out. They are literally out of this world!

And I couldn't resist sharing one of my favorite space-related things- Story Time From Space. Astronauts read picture books from the space station! These are amazing, and speak to the passion these astronauts have for promoting literacy here on earth. You will be even more amazed than your kids (and the picture books are fantastic!)

www.storytimefromspace.com (click on story time videos at top of page)

Black Hole

Black hole, we never knew what you looked like Black hole, but we knew that you were there Black hole, we finally saw what you look like
You're a mighty awesome thing black hole

Black hole, your gravity's irresistible
Black hole, better stay away from you
Black hole, you even steal the light
You're a mighty awesome thing black hole

Well you used to be a star
But one day you simply went too far
You exploded in space, you imploded in space
Now a black hole is what you are